Introduction

The inner city has a set of problems as well as opportunities and possibilities, and the current policies in using its inner possibilities have not been enough to overcome the problems. It is not enough to prepare policies and urban planning plans to guide the physical shape of the city and how to intervene in the city. Considering the vital and necessary conditions of worn-out urban tissues and the problems that exist in the city, targeted intervention and intervention in them has been given more attention. The management of environmental qualities is a complex phenomenon that the conventional urban planning documents and frameworks are not able to do and it requires a different tool; Meanwhile, the urban design framework document is one of the most important documents whose task is to guide urban design projects.

Methodology

This article examines the reinterpretation of urban design to understand the components, meaning, and concepts hidden behind the different bodies of urban design and also concerns the experiences of urban design documents in Iran and the world. Learning the approach of linguistics provides the opportunity to consider the entirety of the subject under study at once and identify the components of the issue and analyze and analyze the relationship between the components systematically. The purpose of this article is to achieve a logical structure and process in the preparation of urban design documents and grammar. This article examines the concept of grammar and the application of linguistic concepts in urban planning and global and Iranian experiences of using urban design documents.

Results and Discussion

Paying attention to the quality of the urban environment, planning and designing the environment to achieve a more desirable and humane urban life than the achievements of the global urban planning system in the last century. Therefore, paying attention to the field of policy-making in urban design and distinguishing between the two areas of policy-making urban design and detailed urban design makes it necessary to prepare a policy-making, coordinating, and guiding document at different levels, this document is an interpretive document. Upstream programs and policies under the title of urban design framework can be provided to city managers.

Conclusion

Examining the experiences of preparing this document from a procedural point of view shows that the process of compiling the urban design framework is generally based on several main stages visioning, situation assessment and introduction, goal setting, and
